

Contributors

Rodica Albu, PhD, is Professor of English Language, Linguistics and Canadian Studies at Alexandru Ioan Cuza University of Iași, founding member of the Linguaculture Research Centre for Interlingual and Intercultural Studies, author, co-author and editor of many volumes and articles that testify to her interest in dynamic approaches to language, culture and society in their interrelatedness. E-mail address: ralbu@uaic.ro

Alina-Elena Anton holds a bachelor and master's degree in American Studies from the Alexandru Ioan Cuza University of Iași. In addition to working as a teacher of English, she has attended several national and international conferences, contributed to different academic publications, and is part of the team working on the Romanian Journal of Artistic Creativity, published by Addleton Academic Publishers. She is currently a PhD candidate at the Doctoral School of Philological Studies at the University of Iasi, working on a thesis about the articulation of cultural identity in the literature of Japanese North American authors. Her research interests include memory and myth in cultural studies, ethnic and racial identities, particularly the ways in which these identities are formed and transformed in plural, multicultural contexts, as well as Asian North American issues, with a special focus on Japanese Canadians and Japanese Americans. E-mail: alina.anton@live.com

Nicoleta Petronela Apostol teaches English at the Arts High School in Alba Iulia. At present she is involved in a Comenius project "Train Ticket to Europe. Language Awareness through Visual Arts" that promotes the learning of Romanian and Latvian languages by means of the English language and the visual arts. Her doctoral dissertation Reading the Self / the Other: Aldous Huxley and Ethical Criticism (2012) explores Huxleyan realms from ethical perspectives with special emphasis on ethical judgements and interactions between the Self and the Other(s). She has participated in conferences in the field of literary studies and foreign languages teaching and learning. E-mail: nicoleta_apostol@yahoo.com

Anca-Beatrice Matei is teacher of English and collaborator of the Department of English of the Faculty of Letters, Alexandru Ioan Cuza University of Iasi, Romania. She holds a Bachelor's degree in English and History, a Master's degree in American Cultural Studies and a Ph.D. degree in Philology. Her research interests include African-American literature and feminism, identity construction, literary theory and cultural studies. E-mail: anca_gioacas@yahoo.com

Michał Różycki is a doctoral candidate in the Institute of English Studies of the University of Warsaw, Poland. His research interests include the role of conspiracy theories and urban legends in United States culture, Victorian and modern reinterpretations of folklore and myth, as well as cyberculture. He is currently finishing his dissertation on the mythical qualities and functions of conspiracy theories. E-mail: m.rozycki@uw.edu.pl

Ana-Maria Ștefan (Constantinovici) is a lecturer at the Comparative Literature Subdepartment of the Faculty of Letters of the Alexandru Ioan Cuza University (Iași, Romania). She teaches World Literature, Literary Anthropology and Imagology and has published articles, studies, book chapters and also one book approaching themes specific to these fields. She coauthored a specialty Dictionary (Dicționar de literatură comparată. Iași: Editura Universității „Alexandru Ioan Cuza”, 2007). She is currently developing a research project on the relationships between literature and anthropology, and at present occupies the position of Chief Editor of the Acta Iassyensia Comparationis e-journal. E-mail: anamaria.stefan@uaic.ro

Cornelia Vlaicu is a PhD student at the University of Bucharest. A graduate of the American Studies program of the same university, she also holds an MA in American Studies. Her current research interests focus on spaces of identity reconstruction in contemporary Native American literature - landscape, community, gendered space, mythical space, on which she has published articles and presented papers at various American Studies conferences. E-mail: corneliavlaicu@yahoo.com